VOTERS APPROVE GARBAGE PROJECT

The voters of Daly City last Tuesday voted in favor of Proposition No. 1, submitted for their approval, 1,013 votes being cast in favor of the proposal, while 506 registered their disapproval.

Proposition No. 1 would authorize the city council to exceed the 5 per cent limitation on municipal expenditures as provided under the Reilly-Stewart bill. By the adoption of Proposition No. 1, the garbage collection plan which has been in effect in Daly City since November 1, under which each user of municipal water who is a householder within the city of Daly City is entitled to a garbage service, the cost of which will be paid frem the general funds of the city, will be continued.

Proposition No. 2, which was defeated by the voters, would have authorized the expenditure of money for material and supervision of work for the unemployed. This prosposition was voted down by a vote of 796 to 724.

It was announced that the city council intended, if Proposition No. 2 was approved by the voters, to make immediate application for relief funds for local projects, on which local men would have been employed.

SIX POSTS AWARDED SERVICE CITATIONS

At the joint Seventh and Eighth District meeting held in the San Francisco War Memorial, Friday, December 16, six Posts were awarded "Most Distinguished Service" citations for attaining their 1934 membership quota by November 12, 1933. Ten Posts ware awarded national community service citations. Seven Posts in the Eighth District have made their entire 1934 membership quota.

Two new Posts, Millbrae Post No. 417, and Ocean View Post No. 494, have been organized since the Department convention in Paasdena last August.

District Commander R. L. Crane wishes to congratulate those Posts which have attained or bettered their December 15 quota, and to thank those who did not, for the work they did.

Department Commander Homer Chaillaux gave a most inspiring talk on membership.

Comrade Hall, of Redwood City Post No. 105, district ritualistic chairman, reports the district ritualistic team organized and will soon be ready for initiations. The team will be made up of members throughout the district, and will wear the regulation American Legion uniform.

District Commander R. L. Crane and all district officers and chairmen wish to extend to the Legionnaires and other ex-service men a very merry Christmas and a happy New Year. L. M. H.

CROCKER P. T. A. EXTEND CHRISTMAS GREETINGS

The Crocker Parent-Teacher Association held their December meeting Tuesday afternoon of last week in General Pershing school.

Following a brisk session a Christmas program was enjoyed by those present. The mother singers chorus sang "Silent Nite" and "Away in a Manger." Jack Cook, a sixth grade student in Crocker school, gave two piano solos. Mrs. Pauw sang a lovely Christmas number, and three little girls pleased the audience with their tap-dancing.

Mrs. F. M. Stanger, first vice-president of Seventeenth District, was guest speaker and gave an interesting talk concerning both "Parental Education" and "Handicapped Children."

The P. T. A. room was most festive in its decorations and lent to the Christmas spirit. Dainty refreshments were served by Mrs. Katch at the close of the meeting.

Mrs. Walker, president, in behalf of Crocker unit, extended Christmas greetings to all members and friends.

Mrs. Walker, Mrs. Abbott, Mrs. Pauw and Mrs. Lewis motored to Burlingame on Friday of last week to attend the Seventeenth District meeting in the high school.

Crocker unit is to be congratulated on having one of its members, Mrs. Pauw, as soloist at the morning session.

The P. T. A. has made plans for a Christmas treat for the school children, a skating party for the graduates and a scholarship.

After giving fourteen fishermen a strenuous battle for three hours, a seven-foot shark, weighing 200 pounds and said to be of the man-eating variety, was landed at Princeton, on the coastside of San Mateo county, last Monday.

SWEET OLD STORY TOLD BY CHIMES

Sing, Christmas bells;
Say to the earth, this is the morn
Whereon our Savior-King is born;
Sing to all men, the bond is free,
The rich, the poor, the high, the low,
The little child that sports in glee,
The aged folks, that tottering go—
Proclaim the morn
That Christ is born.
That saveth them,
That saveth me.
—Eugene Field.

All kinds of folks, all over the world, enjoying looking forward to Christmas day. The music of the chimes, the sweet and lovely voices, the sacred music have done much to bring forth within us the very best.

Our souls seems to give way to all its sacred emotions, in song, in prayer, in kind acts. We surround every thought with happy ideas for those around us.

Whether we are rich or not rich in worldly goods, we can be rich in thought, and carry our beautiful ideals to others in some act of kindness, that will cost little or nothing, but it would mean much to those we bestow it upon.

Our sacred emotions that keep the world at its best seems to be awakened at this season of the year. Most of us try to attend church and listen to the Christ birth proclaimed by word and song. Those who can't attend will reap much joy from that silent voice that will tell us the story in our own way of receiving its beautiful lesson. Many of us will be unable to select gifts for those we love and admire. But, in my opinion, gifts can never express what some act of kindness can do. If they are far away, send a cheery message. If they are ill, send a plant or flowers. But don't forget your friends, in some little, inexpensive way. The result will be greater and will make you feel far better than if you gave the most lavish and extravagant gift.

"Christmas is a day for beautiful thoughts." The result of the Christ birth has given us our real existence. We can think only in a lovable way of those who have ignored the beautiful lesson given us on this day. For we know that the real Christmas spirit is to do to others as we would be done by.

It is not the riches of the world that give us peace. For was it not the poorest mother who gave us the richest blessing that mankind ever received.

Our Heavenly Father bestows His blessings upon the rich and poor alike, if we will but receive them.

A Happy Christmas to all.

LILLIAN G. LANDINI.

AMERICAN LEGION AUXILIARY NOTES

Several members of Daly City Unit No. 410 attended the reception for Mrs. Elizabeth Drendell, National Vice-President for the Western division, held in the green room in the Veterans' War Memorial in San Francisco, last Thursday evening. Included in the receiving line were: Hostess, Past Department President Alice Gill; National Child Welfare Chairman of Area E, Lorena Goode; Department President Ernestine Aylward; Area President Gladys Andersen; Department Educational Chairman Florence Chess; Seventh District President Ruth Trumpeter; Eighth District President Mabel Roseheim, and several other district and County Council officers.

Several musical numbers were rendered during the evening, and refreshments were served.

On Friday evening, San Mateo County Council of the American Legion Auxiliary was held in San Mateo Legion Hall. President Florence Chess presided. A drill team is being formed under the leadership of Mrs. Catherine Foreman. "Peggy and Ray's orchestra," composed of seven 13-year-old youngsters, furnished some very delightful entertainment. San Mateo Unit was hostess for the evening and served refreshments. Cards followed. Daly City will entertain the Council on Friday evening, January 1, in Legion Hall.

The executive board held a meeting on Monday afternoon to make plans for the annual Christmas party for the children, which was held jointly with the Post on Wednesday evening, December 20. This party was well attended and all enjoyed themselves.

On Thursday evening, President June Craft presented the scholarship award to the highest honor graduating student of the Jefferson district, at the Jefferson Union high school.

President June Craft wishes all members a very merry Christmas and a happy New Year. May our good fellowship continue in the future as it has in the past. G. J. H.

TANFORAN'S BRILLIANT FUTURE

By J. W. MARCHBANK

California racing fans are deserving of the best sport in the world, and that it what they are going to get at Tanforan. Traditions in the state make racing a magnet for attracting travelers. With the economic tide turning all to the good of the country the golden era of racing is at hand.

Certain conditions are necessary for carrying out the ambitious program scheduled for Tanforan in the next few years. The wheels of legislation must be set in motion in preparation for the great days. The broadest foundation is planned for the universal pastime on our home course.

Under the provisions of the law now in operation twelve per cent of each of the pari mutuel pools is taken out, four per cent going to the state as a license fee and eight per cent to the racing association.

The twelve per cent "take" should be reduced to nine per cent, with the commission deducted from the money handled being divided as follows:

One and one-half per cent to the state as a license fee.

One and one-half per cent to a fund to be used each year as a purse for the Tanforan Handicap.

Six per cent to the racing association.

Racing is essentially a sport and should be conducted in a manner to bring about the most enjoyment for its staunch supporters, such as the men and women attending Tanforan season after season. The social point of view is imperative in handling racing.

LEGION PRESENTS SCHOOL AWARDS

At the graduation exercises of the Jefferson district schools, held in the Jefferson Union high school, Thursday, December 21, Commander O. C. Cornell, of Daly City Post No. 410, American Legion, presented the American Legion school awards to Jack MacDonald and Myrtle Smith, of the Woodrow Wilson school; Jack Smith and Flora Regan, of Crocker school; and David Gaggero and Helen Callan, of Jefferson school. Department Americanism Chairman Archie Closson made a brief address.

Daly City Post and Unit No. 410 held their annual Christmas party in Legion Hall, Wednesday, December 20. Commander Cornell and President June Craft wish to take this opportunity to thank all members of the Post and Auxiliary for their co-operation in making the party a success.

Daly City Post No. 410 wishes to welcome the new Post, Ocean View Post No. 494, into the Eighth District.

As the holoday season draws near, the officers and members of Daly City Post No. 410 wish to thank all patriotic, civil and fraternal organizations, and all the people of Daly City, for their help and co-operation in carrying out our yearly program. Though this co-operation the Post won a national citation for community service, which was presented at the Seventh and Eighth District meeting held in the War Memorial building, Friday, December 15.

At this time we wish to thank the editor of the Daly City Record for his gracious support through the entire year, and to wish every one a very Merry Christmas and a Happy and Prosperous New Year.

The Ladies Home Club Meets

Last Tuesday the clubhouse of the Ladies Home Club was the setting for a Christmas gathering, which included the regular business meeting. Garlands of evergreens, wreaths and a prettily lighted Christmas tree presented a festive holiday picture. After the refreshments were served by the committee in charge, Christmas and New Year greetings were enchanged among the following members: Mesdames Lillian Landini, Ann Schumacher, Margaret Elmers, Sophie Junkers, Mary Crane, Emily Twesten, Julia Green, Mary May, Julia Sturla, Julia Green, Leo Jost, Bertha Grady, Frederica Volkman, Lizzie Atkinson, and the president, Christine Clay. The club meets again after the New Year.

Former City Judge Passes On

Carl W. Elfving, 66, of Hillsborough, former city judge at San Mateo, died last Monday at Mills Memorial hospital. Elfving served on the bench from 1908 to 1918 and recently on the Board of Freeholders, which drew up the San Mateo county charter.

Raids Catch Many Drivers

More than 150 motorists were caught in another raid conducted by state highway patrolmen on Bayshore highway over the week end, Captain Paul Perussina announced. Of this number, by far the most tagged were for exceeding the speed limit.

OLD GLORY POST AUXILIARY NOTES

On Thursday evening of last week a large group of members of Old Glory Post and Auxiliary motored to Hayward Post, No. 1882, to participate in the dedication of the new Post's colors and presentation of the Purple Heart to some thirty members of the Hayward Post. After the ceremonies the members and friends were entertained by the American Legion band, Boy Scout Troops, Campfire Girls, and several Veteran of Foreign Wars degree teams.

A monster benefit whist was held in the City Hall Auditorium for a needy family on Thursday of last week by the various organizations of Daly City. A good time was enjoyed by all and a substantial amount was realized.

Under the charimanship of Louise Crowley and Charlotte Collins a whist was given to raise funds for the childrens' Christmas tree party to be held tonight, December 22, in the Masonic Hall. We wish to thank all who so kindly attended.

The delegates to the Bi-County Council of Ladies Auxiliaries met at Redwood City last Friday night for the purpose of forming the Ladies' Council. Our Department Senior Vice-President Margaret Hubbard was the presiding officer for the evening. Plans were made for institution and installation, to be held in January. Temporary officers were chosen —Mrs. William Augustus, President; Della Campbell, Senior Vice-President; Sara Salicetti, Junior Vice-President; Ethel Wade, Chaplain. Other elected and appointed officers from Old Glory Auxiliary were Ethel Dorn, Conductress, Genevieve Linser, Trustee, and Elsie Ireton, Color Bearer.

Ladies, reserve January 13, 1934. We are to be the guests of the Bi-County Council of Posts at a dinner and public installation which will be held in D'Anza Hotel, at San Jose.

VETERAN ANSWERS LAST ROLL CALL

Mrs. Ed Golkuhl, of 101 Westlake avenue, asked the local police department to investigate the absence of John Hansen, of 121 Westlake avenue, a neighbor, whom she had not seen for three or four days. She told Officers James Reardon and Ed Heim, who responded to her call, that papers were piled at the front door for three or four days and that the neighbors had not seen the old gentleman, who lived there alone, for some time. She continued with her story, saying that she had peeped through the window and saw the old man lying in bed.

The officers found the door locked and had to break it down to get in. They found Hansen dead. The officers called Deputy Coroner Luella D. Pepper, who took charge of the remains.

Johannes W. Hansen was the man's proper name. He was a retired war veteran and a member of Colonel Robert Loghry Post, Veterans of Foreign Wars. The funeral was conducted from W. C. Lasswell & Co.'s mortuary chapel last Wednesday at 9 o'clock. Interment took place in National Cemetery, Presidio, in San Francisco.

HOLIDAYS BRING HOPEFUL OUTLOOK

By J. W. MARCHBANK
Pioneer in Frontier Mining Work.

With the approach of Christmas, optimism rules in every section of the United States. Sagacious moves on the part of the Federal administration, particularly the activities of various recovery bodies, including currency experimentation, have brought the change in the spirit of the people. Black pessimism of a year ago is gone, fortunately for all of us.

That the pendulum is swinging in President Roosevelt's direction is becoming more apparent with each passing day. Economists usually denominated "orthodox" are gradually losing out to the exponents of the managed currency school, led by advisors of the President.

Practical men of affairs are fast leaving the banner of the old order, which took subconscious trends into account to only a small extent. The tendency is toward what may be called a forward-looking point of view. In glancing over the recent utterances of prominent men I am impressed by the broadminded tenor of their statements.

Frank M. Law, president of the American Bankers Association, is quoted by a news service as saying the nation is well on the road out of the depression. In a talk before an assemblage of bankers, Mr. Law declared American citizens should be proud of the courage shown by the President in battling for restoration of good times.

As has been said in this column on previous occasions, there is a wide distinction between fiat money inflation and the gold buying-expansion of credit reflation of the administration. It is a matter well worth emphasizing. As Mr. Law well said:

"The country is divided into two camps. In one camp are those who stand for what is called sound money, and in the other camp we find the group that is working under what is called a controlled money program.

"In our truly American way we are debating the monetary question with heat, but in large part the discussion is not being confined to a serious argument of the real issues involved.

"There has been too much misunderstanding and misrepresentation by some of the parties on both sides."

Employers are taking much interest in employees, and that's a good sign, too. Walter C. Teagle, president of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, said the other day:

"The world is not winding up its affairs. It is still a good world, with ample resources to supply a comfortable living for all. The way to recovery is not clear, but it is there for us to find, and out of the manifold experiments a solution will come."

That the credit of the Government is extremely good was shown by the subscriptions on the Treasury's $950,000,000 one year 2¼ issue exceeding that figure by nearly three times.

The interest of Canada in the monetary situation in this country is high on account of the close connection in business of the two commonwealths. In A. J. Smith's column in the Vancouver Sun, for example, we read:

"That the United States dollar devaluation program is rapidly approaching its climax is the opinion of some financial agencies. It is expected that, by the middle of January, it should be possible to form conclusions on business prospects in America, including, of course, Canada in this statement. Stabilization by that time would tend to restore confidence and eliminate demands for radical currency inflation. This should initiate another major forward movement in business next spring."

MOTORCYCLISTS ARE PAINFULLY INJURED

Howard Young and Arthur Cleve, both of Templeton avenue, who were riding a motorcycle, were struck by a Ford coupe driven by Joseph Senn, of 832 Paris street, last Monday afternoon about 4:15 o'clock, at Hanover street and Evergreen avenue. Cleve and Young sustained severe injuries and were rushed to the Alemany Emergency hospital by Senn.

The injured youths were attended by Dr. Cleave. Arthur Cleve sustained a fractured right foot and multiple abrasions of both legs. Howard Young sustained contusions, abrasions of both legs, right hand and face and a lacerated left leg.

A report of the accident was given the local police department by the San Francisco police through the Emergency hospital. The many friends of both boys hope they will soon recover from the shock and injuries they sustained.

FIFTY-NINE PUPILS COMPLETE COURSE

On Thursday evening, December 21, Woodrow Wilson, Crocker and Jefferson grammar schools held their graduation exercises at the Jefferson Union high school. Every year the students of the different schools look forward with great anticipation and enthusiasm to this joyous yet sad occasion, when they see their friends reach the goal toward which they have striven for years. The only regret they have is the separation from their playmates and teachers, to whom they have become attached.

The parents who attend the exercises are proud, and justly so, for their children have reached the first milestone in their young lives. The teachers, too, rejoice in the success of their charges, and wish them continued success.

The P. T. A. in each of the three schools are awarding a prize to the student who excels in scholarship in each school. The children and the faculty of the school district appreciate and thank this great organization for the splendid help, encouragement, and co-operation they have displayed on every occasion.

The American Legion, too, works unselfishly for our cause. They show their generosity in a concrete manner every graduation, when they award the American Legion school medal to a boy and girl in each school, who have surpassed in the character building traits, honor, loyalty, courage, citizenship and unselfishness. This is a great honor and there is much rivalry and competition among the children to see who merits this award.

The American Legion Auxiliary is giving a scholarship prize for the boy or girl having the highest scholastic record in all the schools.

Children are men and women in the making. What kind of citizens we have depends to a great extent on home training and environment in the earlier years, and to the guidance and understanding of their teachers in the formative period of adolescense.

When the graduates step upon the stage our hearts fill with pride and joy. These proud boys and girls have attained their goal, and they are entering a ney phase of their lives. All of us hope that the succeeding years will be equally as successful and fruitful as their last eight.

The program of the evening follows:

Procession of Graduates.
Chorus, "The Morn Breaks Fair."
Salutation, Gerald Barton.
Selections, Woodrow and Crocker Glee Clubs.
Recitation, Elizabeth Cattori.
Selections by Schools' Band, Harry Waters, Director.

Plans for reinforcing buildings of the San Mateo high school and Junior college district against earthquakes, were approved at a special election last Monday by a vote of 809 to 280.

PROVIDING FOOD FOR UNEMPLOYED

Distribution of another quota of federal surplus foodstuffs to the unemployed and other needy persons in California was started last Monday, the state emergency relief administration announced.

While a portion of the 11,800 tons of foodstuffs has already arrived in California, much of it is enroute to the state at the present time. The food quota is sufficient to provide four pounds to each of the 6,000,000 men, women and children in California, or 46 pounds to each of the estimated total of 500,000 persons in the state who come under federal or state aid.

The first item of the quota includes 1,639,592 pounds of cured salt pork. With the distribution of this meat during the week San Mateo county will have received 28,320 pounds of the pork, officials said. The first distribution, made early last month, amounted to 1,047,500 pounds.

"Three carloads of dried apples are already here for distribution and the remanider of the quota in the form of butter, corned and roast beef, flour and smoked pork, will continue coming in until well into March," the announcement stated.

CALIFORNIA THIRD IN AUTO ACCIDENTS

California was surpassed only by Nevada and the District of Columbia in its death rate from automobile accidents in 1932, according to a bulletin just made public by a life insurance company.

The death rate in California was 36.9 per 100,000 of population, as compared with 63.4 in Nevada and 38.7 in the District of Columbia. The rate in Arizona was 35.7 and in Wyoming it was 34.5. North Dakota was loyest with a rate of 8.3.

Quoting statistics from the United States Department of Commerce, the bulletin reported that 26,168 deaths resulting from automobile accidents occurred in the death registration area of continental United States, exclusive of the state of Utah, in 1932. The national mortality rate was thus 21.9 per 100,000 of population, compared with 25.1 in 1931.

Men are foolish to demand good-looking secretaries in preference to those with brains, according to Mrs. Marion Pedraza, head of the Pennsylvania federal-state employment service. If the good sister will drop into our office some time we will ilustrate the fact that it is entirely possible to pick one who has both brains and good looks.

ODDS AND ENDS OF THE WEEK'S NEWS

In the opinion of Ray L. Riley, state controller, repeal of the sales tax would be a fatal blow to the state government at this time. He points out that the state's revenues, not counting the sales tax, amount to approximately $100,000,000 annually, of which $80,000,000 is necessary for the operation of public schools.

California farmers are in favor of speeding up the bovine tuberculosis program being carried on by the state department of agriculture and the federal government. Under terms of a resolution passed at the farmers and fruit growers convention and sent to the department, the more extensive program could be financed by a processing tax on all butterfat and dairy substitutes.

Edward Anderson, who admitted he shot and killed Hewitt Tarr, a theatre employ, during a holdup on November 28, was captured last Monday after he had attempted to hold up employees of a bank in San Francisco.

A Redwood City man, Stanley D. Mitchell, was killed and six other persons were injured in San Mateo county automobile accidents during the past week end, a check of police and hospital records showed.

Three men were burned to death when an automobile was wrecked and caught fire in "Dead Man's Dip," near Banning, Cal.

It is estimated 20,000 witnessed the San Mateo air carnival, Saturday and Sunday. Only one mishap occurred during the show, despite all of the daring stunts offered, that happening Saturday, when the plane of Eddie Edison winged into the ground and cracked up. Edison escaped injury.

The will of Horace W. Amphlett, late publisher of the San Mateo Daily Times, and county civic leader, was admitted to probate last Monday in the court of Superior Judge Franklin Swart, Redwood City.

William Henry Moore, 75, retired electrical engineer, died early Monday in a San Mateo hospital, after a brief illness. Moore, father of A. Stanley Moore, well known Burlingame insurance man, was for many years with the Pullman Company, makers of Pullman sleeping cars.

Because he shaved three men last Sunday, in violation of the regulations of the State Barbers' Code, Joseph W. Bell, Stockton barber, had the dubious distinction of being the first man to be sentenced for refusing to obey the terms of the state act. He was sentenced to five days in jail.

Preliminary hearing of Anthony Capaldi, 18-year-old San Jose youth, arrested on charges of being one of the leaders of the mob which lynched Jack Holmes and Thomas Thurmond, has been postponed indefinitely.

At a meeting of the San Mateo County Council, American Legion Auxiliary, in San Mateo, it was decided to form a dril lteam composed of members of units in San Mateo county, and Mrs. Catherine Foreman, of Daly City, was appointed chairman.

Turlock now has 153 men employed on civil works projects in the city and surrounding territory, 71 working on city projects, 40 on county work such as eradication of weeds, and 42 on irrigation district projects, such as repair and cleaning of ditches.

Licenses for liquor sales in San Mateo, first since the pre-Volstead era, were tentatively set in amendments to the business ordinance introduced before the city council last Monday night. License charges will be further studied before final adoption, slated for January 2.

"IS MAKING GOOD," SAYS BRITAIN OF ROOSEVELT

"Roosevelt is making good," reads a streamer headline across the London Daily Express, reflecting what it calls "official and public opinion." Following expressions from prominent persons, the newspaper publishes figures which show the upward trend of American exports and indicates that growing success of the domestic-recovery program in the United States constitutes ground for Britain's fear that the low dollar will be a powerful factor in gaining foreign markets for American goods.

EMPLOYMENT IN OCTOBER SHOWS GAIN OF 237,000

According to advices from Washington, industrial employment in the United States increased in October for the seventh consecutive month, as indicated by the Alexander Hamilton Institute's current report, the number being placed at 237,000 for the month. The number employed in October showed an increase of 4,599,000 over the depression's low reached last March.

TANFORAN RACES AID STATE FUNDS

The funds of the state of California were increased $88,402.84 as a result of the fall racing meet at Tanforan, which came to an end last Sunday, with a charity program. While it is genrally admitted the owners of the popular racing course came out "in the red," the state of California has profited financially as a result of the meet.

The San Bruno course enjoyed its biggest afternoon last Sunday, a crowd of about 8,000 fans being present.

Henry Potter Russell, California sportsman, breeder and chairmar. of the advisory board of the Tanforan Co., Ltd., last Monday released a statement concerning the fall meeting. The statement follows:

The curtain has rung doyn at Tanforan on the first legalized race meeting conducted under the new California pari mutuel law. It is with great satisfaction that we can look back at a meeting which has furnished racing of such a high, clean and sporting calibre. Abuses which have at times marred the sport in California in days gone by have been eliminated and racing of a character for which the people of California so overwhelmingly voted has at last been realized.

"The game in California is now only in its infancy. As times improve, more tracks will become established and the racing and breeding of thoroughbred horses will grow into a sound industry as well as a fine sport giving employment to many and a much needed and increasing revenue to the state.

"It is well known that Tanforan has been operated at a financial loss. To Mr. J. W. Marchbank, the owner, we all owe a further debt of thanks for his financial support. Mr. Marchbank insisted that no expense be spared to provide generous purses to the horsemen and every convenience and safeguard to the racing public.

"We hope, and believe, that this recent meeting at Tanforan has brought back to California racing on a plane that will make the sport live and thrive."

CALIFORNIA'S SALES TAX DECLARED CONSTITUTIONAL

California's two and one-half per cent sales tax is constitutional, according to an opinion handed down at Sacramento in the first test of the 1933 sales tax act.

The opinion, written by Superior Judge Dal M. Lemmon, held that the law was not discriminatory, and that it was not unconstitutional, because it had been passed by a two-thirds

HIGHWAY CONFERENCE SPURS VARIED PLANS

Promising a far-reaching effect on highway development and increased motor tourist travel to California and other western states, a varied program of projects was endorsed at the recent Western interstate highway conference at Reno. One of the most immediate of these projects is the further improvement of two major transcontinental routes, the Victory Highway, U. S. 40, and the Lincoln Highway, U. S. 50. The conference voted to urge federal and state agencies to join at once in a program for hard -surfacing remaining sections of these routes requiring improvement, particularly in Nebraska and Colorado.

Backing this and other projects are the California State Automobile Association, which arranged the conference, and other California organizations which sent representatiyes to Reno, including the Redwood Empire Association, California-Nevada Travels Association, State Chamber of Commerce, Shasta-Cascade Wonderland Association, and various chambers of commerce and other groups.

Proposals advanced at the conference include a number of direct importance to highway development and growth of motor travel. A few of these proposals are:

Elimination of the Meyers grade on the Placerville road, U. S. 50, part of the Lincoln Highway, to permit all year travel over the Sierra summit on this route.

Allotment of all available funds to speed completion of the Feather River Canyon Highway, to connect at the Nevada line with the highway to Reno.

Completion of the Winnemucca-to-the-Sea Highway by immediate construction of that section from the state line to Cedarville, California.

Extension of the Yuba Pass road eastward to the Feather River Highway and to a connection with the Nevada state line.

The conference endorsed the idea of a co-operative exploitation program for stimulating motor tourist travel, and voiced the view that destructive competition between routes and localities be supplanted by efforts toward interhange of travel.

STATE MOTORISTS ARE URGED TO USE CARE AND COURTESY

What can the individual motorist do to help solve the trafifc problem in his own community? Can he, of and by himself, do anything in his daily driving which will aid in bringing about better conditions?

There is one factor which he can exercise, and that is courtesy. Much has been said and written on this subject of motoring courtesy, yet it is a fact that few motorists ever attempt to work the plan in a practiical way, thus giving it an opportunity to prove its real worth.

Why not try it out for a month and see whether or not one's good example will lead others to go and do likewise? Instead of snatching a right-of-way when it does not belong to us, let's give it to the rightful owner, even though he seem a bit hesitant of taking it. And if some so-called "clever" driver rushes up to the intersection and tries to intimidate a motorist into giving him the right-of-yay which is not legally his, the latter would do well to let him steal it. Perhaps an exhibition of courtesy would open his eyes and tempt him to join your one-man crusade.

If one keeps it up long enough, one can be sure that the good endeavor will grow and the ranks will be swelled by an ever-increasing number of motorists who will follow the example of practical courtesy.

Under any circumstances, it is worth a trial to the end that road hogs may be eliminated wherever possible and traffic safety increased for all.

SHOULD BUY CHRISTMAS SEALS

"The Yule log burns bright."

Bringing in the Yule log across the frozen fields, the log that will burn through the winter nights of the holiday season, the symbol of warmth and cheer!

This is the picture on the Christmas Seals; the picture that suggest merrie old England, the great manor house with doors open to all comers, long tables piled high with food and drink, and the sound of laughter and song.

But even as the Yule log was the symbol of holiday cheer and was kept burning throughout this glad season, so is the Christmas Seal a symbol of cheer and good-will that is spread beyond the manor, beyond the town, to all the country, and the fire that these seals light, burns through all the year.

The work of the anti-tuberculosis associations is carried on throughout the year, financed only by the sale of Christmas Seals. With your gift you help to provide preventoria clinics, and the care of doctors and nurses for those afflicted with tuberculosis. You bring direct aid to sufferers whom you may never see and know, yet whose thanks are no less sincere because of that.

The Christmas Seal sale raises the money for activities that are providing health insurance for the people of California. The specific fight against tuberculosis is proving successful, not only against that disease, but in raising the general health of the community.

California should support this Seal sale generously, for the present need is great. Buy the Christmas Seals—that the Yule log may burn bright and spread its warmth and health through all the coming year.

LATEST LAMP PROVIDES THREE LEVELS OF LIGHT

A new incandescent lamp which provides three levels of illumination has been perfected by the General Electric Company's plant at Nela Park, Cleveland.

The Mazda three-light lamp, as it is called, contains two filaments of different wattages which may be burned singly or together. It is manufactured in two sizes—one with 150-watt and 200-watt filaments, and the other with 200-watt and 300-watt filaments. Each is inside frosted. The lower wattage filament may be used for minimum lighting requirements, and the two together for high-level illumination.

The makers of the lamp anticipate that it will find its first application in the field of commercial lighting, particularly in small and medium-sized stores which have definite peaks and low points in their daily business.

DON'T GET UP NIGHTS

Lax the Bladder With Juniper Oil, Buchu, Etc.

Drive out the impurities and excess acids that cause irritation, burning and frequent desire. Juniper Oil is pleasant to take in the form of BUKETS, the bladder laxative, also containing Buchu leaves, etc. Works on the bladder similar to castor oil on the bowels. Get a 25c box from any drug store. After four days if not relieved of "getting up nights", go back and get your money. If you are bothered with backache or leg pains caused from bladder disorders you are bound to feel better after this cleansing and you get your regular sleep. McGraw's Pharmacy says BUKETS is a best seller.

During 1932 more than four billion dollars in insurance money was paid to American policy holders and beneficiaries.

EXPERTS DEVELOP PROCESS TO BURN GAS IN WATER

A method of burning gas in water and other liquids, to heat them, was described at the recent convention of the American Gas Association in Chicago. Large burners, resembling torches, are inserted into the liquid, and, by a special process, the gas is made to burn with a violent flame which quickly brings the contents of the tank to a boil.

This new process is not confined to any one liquid. It can be used to heat acids or to dry solutions in chemical plants. Moreover, it can be employed in wooden tanks as readily as in steel ones.

A Chicago restaurant offers reduced rates to those who eat three meals a day in the place.

Wishing you a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

"THE SPIRIT OF THE AGE"

By COSMO HAMILTON

©, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Service

"A PHILOSOPHER," said John Pitt waving his hand in the air, "is a man who has achieved the art of remaining undisturbed at the troubles of his friends."

All the little clever people round his table laughed.

"I see," said Morden Roden, who was regarded as a failure by them because his novels sold; "but when trouble stalks into his own house and takes the easy chair, what price your philosopher then?" He put this question because Christina Venning had just read from that day's paper a paragraph packed as tightly with trouble as a bomb with TNT. In leeringly suggestive words it conveyed the news that Panglos, the notorious woman-hunter, had left every cent of his money to his "beloved Hyacinth." Would Pitt be able to apply to his own case the art of undisturbance when it was disclosed that the mysterious legatee was the girl who was to be his wife?

Pitt replied to Morden's question from the Modernist point of view. "Trouble among the Intelligentsia," he said, "has no place. Passions, prejudices, principles and pity, the four old-fashioned ingredients of which trouble is made up, are quite unknown to us. We regard life as a mere experiment, a fairly amusing adventure, during which we leave all primitive sensations to the Normal Herd. We refuse to be made to feel. Everything serious bores us. Our motto is: 'Nothing Matters', and so Life is as funny as Death, and all we want to do is to be witty and raise a laugh." There was a round of applause.

This to Morden was a ghastly and poisonous creed. The spirit of the age had not got under his skin. But he realized the absurdity of argument with the young "philosopher" and let the matter drop. When, however, he looked at the lovely Leigh Stopford, the future Mrs. Pitt, there was an expression of such rebellious challenge on her face that the tragic figure of trouble seemed already to have arrived. He liked and was sorry for Pitt. He greatly admired Leigh Stopford. And as it happened Panglos had been his most intimate friend.

There was drama in the fact that he was the only person present who knew of what he had called the beautiful friendship of Panglos and this girl. During the last few years of his life he had shared a house with Morden, and it was to the book-lined room in which he wrote his plays that Leigh had slipped unnoticed every afternoon. In his flowery way Panglos had called her "a faith, a reliance, a refuge," and had treated this secret friendship with a sort of reverence. It was only now, as Morden watched her and saw that she intended not to say that she and the beloved Hyacinth were one and the same, that a reluctant query as to the pure beauty of that friendship hung before his eyes.

Just as the inquisitive Christina was about to fire a question Leigh sprang to her feet, ran her arm through Morden's and with an odd smile at Pitt went out into the sun. She said, "You are asking yourself why I suppress the fact that I am Hyacinth. You think I have something to hide from Jack which had better remain untold. But if you imagine that my relations with Panglos were like those of other girls, why do you side with me now and want to make Jack human by telling him the truth? No. I'm not a clairvoyant or a mindreader. I have a woman's intuition and feel that you're my friend. Answer my question, please."

He said, "Jack used to be a friend of mine and I am devoted to you."

"In spite of your suspicions?"

"In spite of everything."

She gave him a grateful hand. "I needed this," she said. "It brings me to the crossroads. I'm not going to marry a man whose creed I heard just now without putting him to the test. If I'm not to be taken seriously I'm not to be taken at all. Before we go to the altar Jack must face the fact that something does matter—and that something must be me."

• • •

It was Christina Venning who forced the issue that night. She said, as dinner began, looking at Morden with a sudden cunning smile, "Here's the man who can solve this mystery. Here's the man who shared a house with Panglos, knew all his women and of course was well acquainted with the beloved Hyacinth."

To Leigh's delight and astonishment Pitt was interested. He said, "Yes, come on Morden, spring it. Tell us who she is."

"You know her as well as I do. You met her in my room. The first time you saw her she wore a little blue hat. You wrote a sonnet about it which was rather nicely done."

Everyone could see that, coming out of his fog of indifference and undisturbance, Pitt threw back his thoughts. It was no more difficult to look into the mechanics of his brain than those of an open clock. Leigh! The girl was Leigh, his future wife! But in front of the Intelligentsia he forced himself under control. In fact no one had ever seen him so amusing or so absurd. It seemed to Leigh and Morden that the unexpected identification of the Panglos girl left him, after the first great shock, with as little decent feeling as he had had before. Was he too far gone? Was his "intelligent" neutrality to emotion an accomplished fact?

• • •

Later, up in her room, Leigh sat for over an hour watching the lights go out like tired eyes in the valley far below. Her heart was heavy and her spirits at zero point. She felt that she had been an unwilling witness to the suicide of one who had been, when she loved him first, normal warm-hearted, generous and free from the affectations of the modernistic gang. The test had failed. She would break off her engagement and never see him again. Some one opened the door. "What do you want?" she asked.

Pitt shut the door and locked it. Her heart leaped at the sight of his face. It was white with rage. There was nothing of the modernist in his new expression. In the angle of his jaw, the honest set of his shoulders, he was the simple primitive; not John Pitt, the fake philosopher, but the man Jack Pitt who strode across to where she stood and seized her by the arm and who didn't give a d—n as to whether he hurt her or not. (Neither did she. There was joy in her heart.) "Now then," he said. "What were you to Panglos? Go on, out with it." And he shook her so that her hair fell over her forehead like that of a foreign pianist in a moment of ecstacy.

Hope, excitement, delight, rushed to her head like wine. "Why should I tell you? You are absolutely nothing to me."

"Nothing to you?" He shouted the words. "I own you. You're mine. You belong to me." He drew her against his chest and kissed her—honestly, healthily and with the passion of the normal man. He hurt her so much that she nearly screamed with joy. "What were you to Panglos? Come on, out with it."

• • •

She was breathless. "Why do you want to know? You've never wanted to know anything about me before. You didn't care." She threw back her head and laughed. Revelling in this marvelous recovery, this unexpected breakdown, she made up her mind that every stick and stone of his affectation should fall about his ears.

He backed away from that laughter. "I tell you that I love you," he said, "and that my respect and admiration have grown about your feet like the great stones of a plinth."

"I don't believe you," she said. "I've seen no proof of it."

"Proof? Under all conditions, sane or crazy, playing the silly ass or going on with my job, I love you and am yours." He seized her wrist, drew her to him and kissed her on the mouth.

"Um-m," she said to herself, for that was what she wanted. "Proof is always needed, daily, hourly proof. As to what I was to Panglos, who loved and proved his love, you have nothing whatever to say. This is your house but my room and if you don't get out I'll cry for help and have you flung downstairs." She said this on behalf of every living woman and pushed Jack Pitt away. And if she hadn't been convinced already of his complete and absolute cure what he then proceeded to do must have clinched that gorgeous fact.

• • •

Like the typical he-man on whom he had poured such scorn, the hairy-chested primitives who hack down trees with axes to clear the undergrowth, see red when moved to rage and jealousy, demand purity of their wives and sweethearts and thrill to sentiment, he whipped a gun from his pocket and held it to his hip. (She adored the sight of it.) "Now then." Bloodshot his eyes were and his voice hoarse. "If you don't tell me what you were to Panglos and what you did in his rooms this is the end of the whole business for you and me. Go on."

"I promised never to tell." The gun was cold on her breast. "It's an absolute secret," she said. The thing quivered over her heart.

"Tell me the truth or I'll finish you and put the gun in my mouth."

"He was my father," she said.

The gun was pitched through the window with a crash. And with a cry that was heard in the valley he possessed her lips.

"Um-m," she said, while her tears fell. "I badly needed that."

Business Founded on Grief

Founded by a mother who was trying to forget her grief over the death of her only child, a carpet industry in Beriz has become one of the most prosperous in Portugal. Four years ago the woman, the wife of a farmer, lost her boy, and to divert her mind she took up carpet making. So popular were the bright-colored carpets and rugs which she turned out that soon she was teaching six apprentices. Today she employs 300 women workers and scores of others in minor jobs and in transporting the factory's output. The floor coverings are sold in all parts of the world.

Tons of Ice Used by Cafes

Some of the vast cafes on the Champs-Elysees and in Montparnasse use up ice at the rate of two or three tons a day, writes the Paris correspondent of the London Daily Telegraph. The total consumption in all the cafes and restaurants when it is hot is 400 tons a day. In the butchers' shops, fishmongers' shops, and other food shops of the capital between 15,000 and 18,000 tons of ice are used daily. Even the biggest ice factory in Paris cannot produce more than 200 tons in 24 hours. The same factory furnishes a further 100 tons a day from its winter store.

Millions For Christmas Greetings

Charles Frederick Wadsworth

WHEN the postman delivers another sheaf of Christmas cards at the door during the few days just before Christmas, how many of the recipients give a thought to the magnitude of the job of preparing sentiments for helping folks to express a cheery word to friends and kin at that season?

A word about the origin of the Christmas greeting will be interesting.

Thomas Skorrock of Leith is credited by an English journal published prior to 1846 as the originator of the Christmas card, but as no copy of his card came to public notice, another source must be found.

In 1846 J. C. Horseley, R. A., acting upon the suggestion of Sir (then Mr.) Henry Cole, produced a drawing which was lithographed by Jobbins of Warwick Court, Holborn. But one thousand cards were printed, and each was colored by hand.

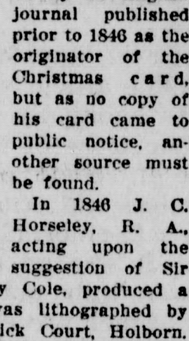
From this beginning the custom of sending greetings at Christmas has spread to the entire Christian world.

In an average year the output of these concerns approximates $90,000,000 at retail prices, of which a large proportion consists of Christmas greetings.

Sentiments usually are purchased from free-lance writers, who submit them to the editorial department of the publishing company, just as fiction and other manuscripts are submitted to editors of magazines; though some concerns maintain a writing staff.

Naturally, writers try to express a sentiment better than the purchaser himself could, and also to provide a variety of sentiments which individuals might find apropos for a particular friend or relative.

Besides the Christmas cards found in the stores (called "counter cards"), individual designs and sentiments are prepared to order for personal use by society people and others. Some of the greetings of this character affected by the Hollywood movie colony are very elaborate and expensive. Others bear merely a formal engraved greeting with the name of the sender.



Another class of Christmas greetings is that provided by the telegraph companies, the sentiments being sent in code and written out in full for the recipients on special blanks decorated with Christmas designs. Telephone greetings also, both local and long-distance, make important additions to the big multi-million-dollar wish for joy to the world and a Merry Christmas to all!

The Babe in the Manger

A Christmas Story

And there were in the same country shepherds abiding in the field, keeping watch over their flocks by night.

And, lo, the angel of the Lord came upon them, and the glory of the Lord shone round about them: and they were sore afraid.

And the angel said unto them, Fear not: for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people.

For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord.

And this shall be a sign unto you: Ye shall find the babe wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger.

And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God, and saying,

Glory be to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men.

And it came to pass, as the angels were gone away from them into heaven, the shepherds said one to another, Let us now go even unto Bethlehem, and see this thing which is come to pass, which the Lord hath made known to us.

And they came with haste, and found Mary and Joseph, and the babe lying in a manger—Luke 33: 8-16

Christmas Trees Good for Something

By Martha Banning Thomas

MR. MINCY, like old Scrooge, said he did not believe in Christmas. He said it was all bunk, which is the modern term for humbug (Scrooge's own word for it). Mr. Mincy was sixty-three years old and had never expended a cent of money or a drop of kindliness where it wouldn't bring in a fine return. That was business. And business was all that Mr. Mincy cared for.

Once, however, business took Mr. Mincy to a far outpost in the Canadian woods. He found himself on the 24th of December trying to get transportation back to a tiny village from where he could take a train. The only person who could take him was a man who said he was on his way to get a Christmas tree for the kids.

"Christmas tree!" snorted Mr. Mincy. "Never heard of such foolishness!" But he finally had to go. Much time was squandered on selecting and cutting down the tree. Mr. Mincy raged. Finally they were ready to start on. The road was extremely rough, the hills steep, the car old and dilapidated.

They came to the steepest hill of all. One side a sheer rise of cliff; on the other a drop to a deep gully. "Brakes won't hold on this," declared the driver, "hardly dare to go down."

Mr. Mincy was almost violent in his remarks.

At last a means was devised of holding the car back on the steep grade. The Christmas tree was lashed to the rear, lengthwise. It dragged on the ground and its weight and branches served to keep the car from crashing down the hill at a dangerous speed.

"You see," said one of the men in a slow drawl, "Christmas trees are some good after all!"

Mr. Mincy was obliged to admit they were . . . but it was like pulling teeth to drag the acknowledgment from him.

A Blessing in Disguise

By Katherine Edelman

CHRISTMAS shoppers were milling through Main street—happy, good-natured folks who smiled and exchanged cheery wishes with each other.

Jack Weber, standing near the entrance of the Anchor store, grew angry at himself. Why couldn't he enter into the spirit of the Christmas season, as these people were doing—why was he bitter and peeved at the whole world because Ethel Porter had rudely refused to go to the Waring Christmas party with him? She had turned him down at the last minute for Bob Fuller. His pride was hurt; and his heart ached a bit, too, for he had grown very fond of Ethel in the last few weeks. And he was pretty sure, until this evening, that she had cared.

Well, that was all over now! Bob Fuller would be dancing with her tonight, and showing her all the little attentions that he had hoped to lavish upon her. He scowled deeply as he thought of this.

Two small children looked curiously at Jack. He drew back into the shadow, growing more irritated, more conscious of the fact that he was so utterly out of tune with the spirit of Christmas. He felt like an alien in a strange land . . .

Suddenly his shoulders straightened, and a smile chased the shadows from his face. "I can't be the only one with a grievance," he muttered to himself—"among all these people. There must be others who have had disappointments. And look how they are out to make others happy! Why can't I do that, too?"

To think was to act with Jack Weber. Soon he was inside the store, rushing from counter to counter, making purchases. His dark eyes glowed with eagerness. It was a shame the way he had neglected his sister Betty and her family lately. He had given all his time to Ethel Porter. He had even allowed himself to get mad at Betty for hinting that Ethel was not exactly suited to him. He must try and make amends. He would see that Betty's children were supplied with toys for a long time to come.

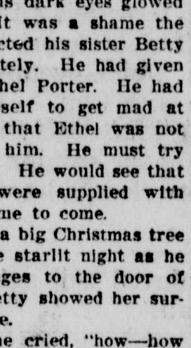
The lights from a big Christmas tree shone out into the starlit night as he carried his packages to the door of the bungalow. Betty showed her surprise and pleasure.

"Why, Jack," she cried, "how—how lovely of you; this makes Christmas just perfect. And you can't think who has just come to spend Christmas with us—Gladys Dare, who used to live next door to us in Melvin! Gladys, come and meet someone. Surely you haven't forgotten Jack?"

A pretty, dark-haired girl jumped up from where she had been playing with Billy and Sue by the Christmas tree. Her eager brown eyes were alight with pleasure. "Remember Jack?" she echoed, as she held out her hand; "as if I ever could forget the big boy who teased me so much, and who was so good to me, too."

"Uncle Jack teases Sue and me, too," Billy broke in, "but we like him a lot. He's the most fun. Don't you like him?"—looking up at Gladys. A quick flush covered her face. "Why, of course I like him, Billy," she stammered.

Jack Weber enjoyed Christmas more than he had ever done before. He found that disappointment can be changed into a thing of joy. For the comradeship with Gladys, with its background of memories of childhood years, filled him with a strange new happiness. He thought now of Ethel's behavior with a feeling of relief; it had really been a blessing in disguise, for it had led him to Gladys.



But it was several days later before he awakened to the true state of his feelings, and found that he loved Gladys more than all the world. She seemed to fit into his life as if she had always been there. He wondered how he had gotten along before she came.

And when Gladys answered a shy "yes" to a question he asked a few days later, he knew he was fully in tune with the joy and gladness of the Christmas season.

Problem Solved

Uncle John had sent father a pipe for Christmas. But father never smoked a pipe. As it came from a long distance it could not be exchanged. The family was discussing the problem of what to do with it when five-year-old Bobby spoke up: "I know! Give it to Santa Claus. He's been good to us."

Fifty Famous Frontiersmen

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

"The Original Boy Scout"

COL. J. W. REDINGTON'S friends of today in California know him as a former newspaper publisher and superintendent of the printing office at the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, but half a century ago he was "the original Boy Scout." At least that was the title once conferred upon him by no less a person than Gen. O. O. Howard, one of the most successful campaigners of the old Indian-fighting days who wrote of him:

"He served under my command as a volunteer scout and courier during the Nez Perce and Bannock Indian wars of 1877 and 1878 and also as one of Farrow's Scouts against the hostile Sheepeater Indians in 1879. He rendered very efficient service for, being a lightweight youth, he was able to get many more miles of hard riding out of a horse than could a heavy man. By coming through under cover of darkness he brought in dispatches that kept me in close touch with Captain Fischer's Scouts far in advance, and I well remember how our pickets were instructed not to shoot when they heard his 'Yip! Yip!' signal coming out of the darkness as he approached our camp. The Boy Scout organization did not exist in those days, but certainly Jack Redington was the original Boy Scout."

At the age of sixteen young Jack Redington ran away from his home in Massachusetts to seek adventure in the West. He soon found it, for the next spring after his arrival in Salem, Ore., the Nez Perce Indian war broke out.

On the Fort Hall reservation Capt. S. C. Fischer was enlisting a company of Bannock Indian scouts for service against the Nez Perces and the young easterner obtained permission to go along. A few days later young Redington found himself in the company of fifty Bannocks, almost as wild as the hostiles they were going out to fight, and only two other white men, Captain Fischer and another scout named Gird.

Then followed his career as a scout for Howard in the epic chase of Chief Joseph's Nez Perces which ended far up in the Bear Paw mountains of Montana where General Miles held the Indian chief at bay until Howard and his weary troopers came up to take part in the surrender of the "Indian Napoleon." The next year Redington was again in the field in the Bannock campaign and the following year he was with Lieutenant Farrow when that young officer and his party performed one of the most brilliant feats in the history of the American army in running to earth the band of renegade Indians known as Sheepeaters.

After this campaign Redington drifted back into Oregon and started on his career as a newspaper publisher which made him one of the best known editors in the Pacific Northwest.

Champion of the Santa Fe Trail

IN AUGUST, 1846, Tom Tobin, scout and guide for Gen. Stephen Kearney, while carrying dispatches from Santa Fe to Fort Leavenworth, Kan., made the trip of 830 miles in a little less than 11 days, averaging better than 75 miles a day. That was considered a great feat of long-distance riding, but Felix N. Aubrey, French-Canadian hunter and trapper, declared that he could have covered the same distance in two-thirds of that time.

When his statement was challenged, Aubrey offered to back his words with money and the result was a wager of $5,000 with no restrictions as to the number of horses he might use. All he had to do was to cover the distance from Santa Fe to Independence, Mo., in seven days and eight hours.

In preparation for his trip Aubrey selected six good horses and had them led with eastward-bound army wagon trains, which he would overtake.

For the first leg of his journey Aubrey had selected a blooded racing mare, which he pushed to the limit of her endurance, confident that he would overtake the train leading his first remount before it had gone 100 miles from Santa Fe. But the train had traveled faster than he anticipated, and it was not until his game little mare had staggered past Wagon Mound, 150 miles from Santa Fe, that he sighted the train.

Stopping only long enough to jerk the saddle from his tired mare and clap it on the fresh horse, grab some food that was handed him, so he could eat it as he rode, Aubrey sped on. His next stop was at a ford on the Arkansas, since known by his name, where he took time out for a few hours' rest. Then he entered on the most perilous part of his journey. The country ahead of him was overrun with hostile Indians and he did not dare to stop for sleep until he had overtaken a wagon train. During the whole journey Aubrey stopped for sleep only three times.

Several times he was pursued by Indians and only the fleetness of his mounts saved him from capture and death. But he made the journey safely and in five days and fourteen hours after leaving Santa Fe he rode into Independence. He had covered the same distance as Tobin in just a little more than half the time required by Tobin and he had used only seven horses as compared to Tobin's nine. Not counting time out for sleep and meals, the French-Canadian had averaged six miles an hour for the entire distance, a feat of endurance that has few duplicates in history.

CHRISTMAS DAY

Although the birth of Christ is the event which is supposed to be celebrated on Christmas, we are more and more inclined, as a recent writer suggests, to celebrate Santa Claus on December 25. Certainly in the minds of most persons the giving and receiving of gifts holds a larger place than the holy event which the day commemorates. However, in the true Christmas spirit, the Record wishes each and every one of you a very merry Christmas, and trusts that the coming year will be more pleasant and profitable than the past.

Christmas customs and symbolism are drawn from many sources, some of them of pagan origin. The date, December 25, approximates that of certain ancient festivals which were observed long before the Christian era, such as the Roman Saturnalia, the Scandinavian Yule, the winter festival of the heathen Britons, and later, the Roman festival of the sun-god Mithra. This date was not incorporated in the Christian calendar until about the fourth or fifth century.

The Christmas tree is believed to have been derived from the Egyptian use of a palm branch of twelve shoots to signifiy the completed year, but its present significance is thought to have originated in Germany. The use of evergreen decorations, particularly mistletoe, has been observed since the time of the pagan Druids in Britain.

The sending of Christmas gifts may be traced back to ancient Rome. The custom is by no means universal, however, and is unknown in the Holy Land and among Asiatic Christians generally. Children of the Orient have no Santa Claus. And there is another instance in which the children of these United States have much the best of it during this holiday season.

BANDIT NOW "TENDS TO KNITTING"

Confinement in jail has had a tsrange effect on big, bad Andre Spada, a notorious brigand of Corsica, who was captured last June after terrorizing the countryside for many months. Prison officials report that Spada recently took to knitting socks, which occupation, he said, helped him to "communicate with God." Alienists think he is crazy, and are observing him closely in an effort to find out. Probably Spada is of the opinion that if he had "attended to his knitting" more closely, he would not have landed behind the bars.

It looks as if the unemployed will get jobs, even if Uncle Sam has to hire them all.

THIRTY YEARS OF FLYING

December 17 marked the thirtieth anniversary of the first airplane flight by the Wright brothers at Kitty Hawk, North Carolina, in 1903. After long experimenting these aviation pioneers succeeded in getting their plane off the ground by its own power, but the first flight lasted only twelve seconds, during which time it flew 120 feet.

Later in the same day a second flight of fifty-nine seconds was made. These epoch-making flights marked the beginning of man's mastery of the air, fulfilling an age-old ambition which most persons declared could never be realized. In fact, it was only a few days before the Wrights actually accomplished it that a certain Congressman on the floor of the House, in opposing an appropriation for experimenting with flying machines, asserted that anyone who thought human flight would ever be possible was a fool.

At first progress was rather slow, and for several months only straight flights were made, but on September 15, 1904, Orville Wright made the first turn in the air, and five days later succeeded in flying in a circle. The first time a plane remained in the air as long as half an hour was on October 4, 1905, with a flight lasting thirty-three minutes. From that time on developments by the Wrights and others were rapid.

Among the other early airplane builders and flyers who became famous may be mentioned Curtiss, Bleriot, Santos-Dumont, Farman, the Voisin brothers and their associates. Many daring aviators lost their lives through attempting stunts in exhibition flying which were too difficult for the primitive machines employed.

Contemplating the amazing feats of present-day aviators, it is difficult to realize that the flying art is only thirty years old.

NATIONAL RECOVERY ADMINISTRATION

With astonishing few exceptions, the news associations have failed to keep the public informed of the most vital, and at the same time the most interesting, feature of the National Recovery Administration at Washington. This relates to the public hearings on the codes of fair competition submitted by more than 1,000 trades and industries. They not only supply information concerning the conduct of big and little business never previously available to the people because of inhibitions of the anti-trust laws. They afford opportunities to judge exactly how the National Industrial Recovery Act is being administered, as promised by the Administrator.

In his statement to the public on signing the act, President Roosevelt said it "is a challenge to administration," and added: "The public must be protected, and to this end we are putting in place of old principles of unchecked competition some new government controls. They must above all be impartial and just. The purpose is to free business, not to shackle it." Apart from the evident necessity for public support and co-operation, without which it would be impotent, no phase of NIRA is so transcendant in importance as its administration.

WAYS OF CRIMINALS

An interesting sidelight on the ways of professional criminals is given in a magazine article which declares that cities where these gentry habitually congregate to spend their loot are seldom the scene of their banditry.

The writer cites the case of Toledo, once known as being unusually free from underworld crime, yet all the time it was the rendezvous for safe-crackers, hold-up men, and other desperate crooks. It was an unwritten law among them that no "jobs" were to be pulled in Toledo, and although the police knew of their presence, they were not moletsed, because, as the chief said: "We never bother them, because they never bother us."

Finally a new police commissioner was appointed, and when he learned of the situation he ordered a clean-up. Then, to quote the article: "There were immediate retaliations. Safes began to explode like firecrackers on the Fourth. Hold-ups became as common as measles. Cops shot crooks and crooks shot cops. Today Toledo is no longer immune."

One dififculty said to be experienced in catching the present-day criminal of the professional class is that many of their old underworld haunts which were formerly well known to the police have been broken up. The crooks are scattered throughout the cities, often living in comparative security in high-class neighborhoods. Thus a new and serious complication of the criminal problem has arisen, for which no solution appears to be forthcoming.

MISFITS IN COLLEGE

The growing idea that a large number of young men now in college would be better off elsewhere was recently emphasized by no less an authority than Chief Justice Charles E. Hughes, in an address at Brown University, from which he was graduated in 1881.

He roundly criticized the many modern college activities which have nothing to do with education, and which attract the mental loafers whose only ambition is to get by and obtain a diploma. Referring to such a student, Mr. Hughes said: "I should take him out at once and tell him to make his own way. Those who are not disposed to make good use of their college years would be better off elsewhere."

Neither Mr. Hughes nor any other sensible person would disparage the value of a college education, but the fact is that our colleges are encumbered with many alleged students who have neither the capacity, the energy nor the ambition to profit by college training.

THE INDIAN PROBLEM

There has been an Indian problem in the United States ever since its earliest settlement, but that problem is being solved by the gradual absorption of the Red Man into our own general population, according to former Secretary Wilbur of the Department of the Interior.

We have about 350,000 persons of Indian blood in the entire country, of whom about one-third are in Oklahoma. The rest are widely scattered among twenty-five states, but even the reservation Indians are intermarrying with the white population and are rapidly assuming the white man's manner of living. A notable exception to this general trend is seen among the Navajos of Arizona, who have a reservation as large as the state of New Jersey, and still hold aloof from the paleface.

It is the policy of the government to encourage the remaining Indians to obtain education and training, with a view to their giving up reservation life and taking their places among the independent citizens of the country. There are maintained 203 day and boarding schools for Indian pupils, where instruction, food, lodging and clothing are furnished free by Uncle Sam. These are privileges granted to no other element of our population.

Dr. Wilbur declares that it has become obvious that the Red Man eventually must lose his identity and become as the rest of us, and adds: "From a sentimental standpoint, there is much to regret in this fact, but it is none the less inevitable."

David McCormick, of Seattle, made a collection of five alarm clocks and now doesn't need even one. Walking down the street, the loud ticking of the timepieces caused his search by detectives and it was found that he had stolen them. Now McCormick is in jail, where an attendant will see that he doesn't oversleep.

Our monetary policy will probably be settled by a check-up to determine which side has the most picturesque vocabulary.

Romans Were Progressive in the Matter of Heating

Ancient history tells us that the Romans were quite progressive in the matter of heating public buildings. Seneca, famous Stoic philosopher, writing in the first century A. D., called public attention to a new invention termed "hypocaust." This was a low basement chamber where fuel was burned so that the room above it became heated and through pipes inserted in the walls the warm air was spread through this and adjoining rooms.

The modern hot-air furnace is built on the principle of the hypocaust, though it was left to more modern scientists to apply the principle to domestic heating. Today the furnace is an almost indispensable feature of a complete household.

Natural gas, piped from the San Joaquin Valley oil fields at high pressure, is available to consumers in nearly every section of Northern and Central California, and has established itself as the ideal fuel for house and heating purposes. It is convenient and clean, and, having more than double the heating value of manufactured gas, must prove, on a basis of cubic foot consumption, proportionately more econmical to use. Statistics show that since its introduction cooking and heating bills have been so materially reduced as to allow a wider distribution of the family income. In other words, the new fuel has come to the aid of the domestic budget at an auspicious moment, when dollars count.

Natural gas heating service is automatic of operation and quite safe, imposing no burden of care and attention upon the housewife. Domestic dwellings vary in type, size, and arrangement, but there is no dwelling so constructed that the heating problem it presents cannot be solved by some sort of installation using natural gas for fuel. The devices on the market are many, varying from central furnaces to individual floor furnaces, radiant-fire grates and portable heaters of all kinds. The gas company employs experts whose advice is at the disposal of the householder free of charge, and installations can be made on terms to suit the most modest household budget. While it is to the gas company's interest to increase the general consumption of its product, it is still more to the company's interest to secure satisfied cusomers.

Natural gas in practically unlimited supply was placed at the disposal of consumers in Northern and Central California in 1930 through the initiative and enterprise of the Pacific Gas and Electric Company. It cost the company many millions of dollars and it involved a substantial drop in revenues from gas sales, but it filled a long felt want. It was a case of Service First.

In the beginning of the year 1930 gas as a house heating agent was used in but 10 per cent of Northern and Central California homes. Today 92 per cent of all house heating appliances sold to the public are gas fueled. Housewives who are not yet suited, please take notice.

In the past few years attendance at motion pictures in this country has ranged from the depression low of 60,000,000 a week to a peak of about 100,000,000.

GARBAGE PERMIT DENIED BY BOARD

The San Mateo county board of supervisors last Monday afternoon denied the application of San Francisco for a permit to dump garbage at Mills field under the fill and cover system.

When the issue was brought before the board, Supervisor Albert Witt, made a motion that the application be denied. It was seconded by Supervisor Rosalie M. Brown. The board voted unanimously against it.

Following the action of the board, Clyde Healey, assistant city engineer of San Francisco, who spoke in favor of the issue before it was voted on, announced that the city of San Francisco probably would appeal to the courts for the privilege of dumping garbage at Mills field under the fill and cover system, and asked for a test of the San Mateo county ordinances that places the granting of applications in the hands of the board of supervisors.

The permit was denied in the face of a strong appeal from the San Mateo County Federation of Improvement Clubs and Associations that it be granted.

Opponents of the Mills field garbage dump have held that it will represent a menace to public health.

CHILD LABOR STOPPED BY INDUSTRIAL CODES

Preliminary reports on operation of industrial codes to the Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor have been received from offices which issue working permits to twenty-four states. These show, said Secretary of Labor Perkins, that "very few children of 14 and 15 years are still holding full-time jobs in industry." Chicago and Milwaukee reported all such permits recalled, as they have been more than two-thirds in all reporting offices. All said the policy is to revoke them as soon as possible.

New York City asked more time, with few work certificates outstanding. Miss Perkins said: "Reports indicate increasing opportunities for young workers, but these are being filled by the boys and girls of more schooling, many of whom have been eagerly awaiting jobs for months. This is the result of the N. R. A. policy of conserving the younger children for education."

"Wait a minute, Pahson! You ain't talkin' religion now—you is talkin' bisiness!"

Queen Anne's Lace

SYNOPSIS

Disappointed, through her inability to put finishing touches to her costume for a dance, Anne Chamberlain is irritated by the stolidity of her escort, George Hildreth. A visitor in the community, Neal Conrad, young lawyer, is to be the "sensation" of the evening, and Hildreth, Anne's suitor, is vaguely jealous. Conrad is impressed by Anne, readily perceiving her fine character. He invites her to accompany him and his hostess, Mrs. Griffin, on a picnic the following Sunday. Anne accepts, though aware she is being "unconventional." Anne, dipping into scanty savings, buys suitable "finery" for the trip from an old friend, Mr. Goldenburg.

Anne's mother, who had been torn between her fear that he might not renew his invitation, and her hope that he would, rose with assumed reluctance.

"Wal, ef yer so dead set on it," she puffed, "mebbe I might as well. Jest a short ways. An' don't drive too fast. It would put me all of a tremble ef ye should."

They were gone. Anne fed George with the lemonade and cake, and sat dumbly beside him, only shaking her head when he urged her to join him, listening intently for the return of the motor.

At last it came. Every one was laughing, and Neal was coming up the scrubby walk with a small boy hanging on either hand. At the rickety gate he paused. Anne could see and hear him plainly.

"No, I don't believe I better come in," he was saying. "You know what I told you about Mrs. Griffin's nerves. I don't like to disturb her. But I've been wondering—She and Roy and I have to take a little ride through the mountains tomorrow, and I thought possibly you'd let your daughter come with us. We'd take good care of her. You've seen for yourselves that there really isn't anything to be afraid of in a horseless carriage. Would you have any objections?"

Again Mr. and Mrs. Chamberlain exchanged glances. "Why, no," said Mr. Chamberlain at length, when he thought he had understood his signals correctly, "I dunno's I would. I think 'twould be a real pleasant change for her. Don't you, Mummer?"

"Wal, I dunno's I've any objection either, ef Anne would like ter."

"Suppose we ask her."

Suddenly Anne saw it all—the tact, the skill, the kindness with which Neal had managed everything. And she had doubted him— Oh, how stupid, how wicked she had been! She went towards him, blinded with contrition, with gratitude, with joy.

"I've just been asking Mr. and Mrs. Chamberlain," he said blandly, "whether they would have any objections to your going to the mountains with the Griffins and me tomorrow—provided, of course, that you would like to go. They've been kind enough to give their consent. Would it be convenient if I came for you about nine?"

"Yes," said Anne.

She could not, to save her life, have said another word. She stood still watching the others as they swarmed about him, while he cranked the car and climbed into the high seat. Then she went back—to the parlor and George. There was one piece of cake left, and a little lukewarm lemonade at the bottom of the pitcher, swimming above undissolved sugar and a few seeds.

"I guess I am a little hungry and thirsty after all," she said gayly, "I'm going to finish these myself, if you don't mind."

CHAPTER IV

Anne was waiting for Neal in the yard when he appeared, promptly at nine, the following morning. He insisted on going to the porch and chatting with the family for a few minutes; then they started off. At first he was entirely occupied with gear-shifts and brakes; but soon he turned to her gayly.

"This is fine! You don't know how pleased I am!"

"It's fine for me. You've been simply wonderful, arranging it all, and making it look so easy when it was really hard."

"Oh, that was nothing— Do you mind if I tell you how nice you look?"

"Of course I don't mind. Why do people always ask you if you mind when they have something pleasant to say, and remark, 'I think you ought to know' when they're going to tell you something perfectly horrid?"

"I don't know. But they do, don't they?" Neal laughed. "Well, then, 'perhaps you won't mind' if I tell you, too, how lovely you were these last two evenings. You look just like a white rose in that muslin dress."

"Oh, do you really think so? I'm awfully glad! I bought it Friday, in Wallacetown, from Mr. Goldenburg. And these clothes, too. Was this what you meant by 'a simple little serge suit'?"

"Exactly. And the hat is corking, too—I've been doing some shopping myself. I've bought two of those new bottles that keep things hot or cold, whichever you like. Have you seen one?"

"No, but I've read about them in advertisements."

"Well, today you'll see them in action. We're going to have hot coffee and iced tea. Mrs. Griffin has put up a wonderful lunch; and its a perfect day. I should say we were having good luck all around."

"Well, I should say we were."

The Griffins, armed with hampers, jars and wraps, were all ready to start when Neal and Anne reached Wallacetown; and Mrs. Griffin, taking in Anne's attractions with one swift glance while the introductions were going on, was not long in deciding that Roy must be rescued, at any cost. She insisting on sitting on the back seat with him, while Anne resumed her place beside Neal in front. Her rapture at the sensation of swift motion, like imagined flying, her eager astonishment at the beauty of the scenery, her joy in being with Neal, were all too great for utterance. They reached the famous "gorges" in time to go through them before luncheon. Mrs. Griffin was sure the walk would be too much for her, and besides, she wanted to get things ready for their meal. So Roy dutifully remained behind to help her. Once or twice, hungrily, he took a stealthy glance at his watch, realizing that Anne and Neal were certainly not hurrying, that they must indeed have lost all track of time. At last they reappeared, flushed and laughing. Anne had taken off her coat, and Neal was carrying it over his arm; the delicate skin of her neck and arms showed pink and soft through the sheer white of her shirt-waist; her hair was curling in moist tendrils around her face. Roy thought, miserably aware that it was now too late for the thought to do him any good, that he had never seen her look so pretty before—or else he had, stupidly, never realized how pretty she was. She had brought back some little souvenirs, and was arguing that she ought to pay for them, that Neal simply mustn't spend so much for her; and Neal was insisting, teasingly, that this was his party.

Still contending, they sank down on the grass beside the Griffins. The contents of the magic bottles were tested and declared delicious; so were the veal loaf and the angel cake, and all the other goodies which Mrs. Griffin had cooked with such skill. At the end of the feast, Neal produced from a hiding place in the car two large boxes of candy, and while the ladies were opening these, with exclamations of surprise and delight, he lit a cigarette. Roy did not smoke; his mother did not approve of it.

After a lazy half-hour Neal suggested that they should ride down to "the Lake" and row a little while.

"Oh, Im terribly afraid of boats!" exclaimed Mrs. Griffin, shrinking back. "And Roy doesn't know how to row. I've always been afraid to have him learn, because he might drown. But you take Miss Chamberlain, Neal. We'll wait for you here. I might get a little nap."

The row took even longer than the walk, and it was late afternoon before they started on their way home; twilight when the Griffins were deposited at their front door, and Anne and Neal on their way back over the hills to West Hamstead. Neal brought the car to a stop and spoke a little huskily.

"I've got to go away in the morning," he said, "I've stayed longer than I should already. Of course I'm coming back. You know that. But I don't want to say good night yet. Couldn't we take a little walk somewhere together before I leave you at your house?"

Anne hesitated. He laid his hand over hers, as he had done on the night of the dance.

"Please," he said as he had said then. And again she found herself powerless to refuse.

"We could let down the bars and go through this pasture to the lane that runs out to the meadow back of our barn. No one will see us. And it's very quiet and lovely there."

"Yes. That's it."

He helped her out of the car and opened the bars. Together they passed into the cool greenness of the pasture, sweet with the scent of the August fragrance.

"I'm afraid you'll stumble and hurt yourself, it's so dark where the moonlight doesn't strike. May I put my arm around you?"

"Yes."

1934's Anniversaries

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

THE beginning of a new year is a time for looking forward and planning how to make the best use of the 12 months, the 52 weeks, the 365 days which will be ours during the coming year. It is also a time for looking backward over the past year and the other years that have gone before to take stock of our accomplishments and to benefit by our experience.

One evidence of our pride in the American tradition is the custom of observing in one way or another the anniversaries of certain events which proved to be significant in our national development. Taking the century, 100 years, as the unit of time which indicates antiquity and a corresponding reverence for those things "which must be good because they are old" we have fallen into the custom of pausing in the midst of the busy present and our plans for the future to hark back to the past and recall its events.

We do this not only on the one hundredth anniversary, which we call the centennial, but also upon the anniversary of multiples and fractions of that period of time. Thus we frequently celebrate the twenty-fifth, the fiftieth and the seventy-fifth anniversary of events rather than wait for the one hundredth anniversary and we are even more pleased in our feeling of honoring antiquity when we can celebrate the sesqui-centennial (one hundred fiftieth), the bi-centennial (two hundredth) or the tri-centennial (three hundredth) of some event in American history.

As the year 1934 opens, an examination of American history will show that we will have occasion for a number of these celebrations if we choose. The only quad-centennial (four hundredth) anniversary of any importance is that of the voyage of Jacques Cartier, the Frenchman, who in 1534 passed Newfoundland and discovered the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

Two events of 1634 afford an opportunity for tri-centennial celebrations and plans are already under way for them. From Michigan comes the word that the Mackinac Island State Park commission is preparing a tercentenary celebration on that island next summer of the voyage of a Frenchman, Jean Nicolet, upon whom the mantle of Samuel de Champlain, as explorer toward the west, had fallen. On July 1, 1634, Nicolet, accompanied by seven Huron Indians, set out from Three Rivers on the St. Lawrence, ascended the Ottawa river, went across to Georgian bay, paddled his canoe along the north shore of Lake Huron to Sault Ste. Marie, passed through the Straits of Mackinac and was the first white man to gaze upon Lake Michigan, known then and for many years afterwards as the Lake of the Illinois.

Continuing down the western shore of Lake Michigan, Nicolet and his companions entered Green Bay and landed, there to be greeted by a party of Winnebago Indians with whom he made an agreement that they should take their furs to the French posts on the St. Lawrence to trade. He pushed on to visit other tribes, ascended the Fox river to the central part of Wisconsin and spent the winter there, returning to Quebec in 1635 to report to Champlain.

The other tercentenary celebration which is already under way but which will reach its climax during the coming year is that of the founding of the colony of Maryland from which grew the state of that name.

In 1632 King Charles I of England granted to George Calvert, Lord Baltimore, a large tract of land lying north of the Potomac river and south of the Plymouth colony's boundaries. Calvert's motive in seeking this grant was a desire to open in the New world a refuge for men of his own faith, the Roman Catholics, who were then suffering persecution in England. Under the charter granted to Calvert he had larger powers than had yet been granted to any colony settling in America and thus there was introduced here a new form of government, known as the proprietary system.

But Calvert died before the signing of the charter and his son, Cecil Calvert, the second Lord Baltimore, received the grant. Opposition from Virginia made it advisable for him to remain in England to protect his rights, so he appointed his brother, Leonard Calvert, as lieutenant-general of the colony which had been given the name of Maryland, in honor of King Charles' Catholic queen, Henrietta Maria.

On November 22, 1633, two ships, the Ark and the Dove, left Cowes bearing Lord Baltimore's two brothers, Leonard and George Calvert, "with very nearly twenty gentlemen of very good fashion," most of whom were Catholics, and "about three hundred laboring men well provided in all things," the majority of whom were Protestants.

On March 25, 1634, the colonists landed on an island at the junction of the Potomac river and Chesapeake bay to which they gave the name of St. Clement's island, where for the first time in history a party of English Catholics celebrated mass.

Finding this island too small for the site of a settlement, a little later the colonists sailed down the river until they came to the mouth of a stream to which they gave the name River St. George. Ascending this a little way they came to an Indian village and purchased from them for some axes, hatchets and "several yards of cloth" the site of the first permanent settlement in Maryland, to which was given the name of St. Mary's.

Although March 25 is the important date in Maryland history, the principal celebration of the Maryland tercentenary in 1934 will be held on June 20, since it was on June 20, 1632, that Lord Baltimore was granted his charter by King Charles and more favorable weather for the celebration can be expected in June than in March.

The year 1734 had no outstanding events such as these two in 1634, to provide the occasion for bi-centennial celebrations of an elaborate nature although the following are noteworthy dates in that year:

January 20—Robert Morris, Philadelphia merchant, banker and "Financier of the Revolution" was born in Lancashire, England.

March 19—Thomas McKean, member of the First Continental congress, signer of the Declaration of Independence and president of the Eighth Continental congress, was born in Chester county, Pennsylvania.

November 17—John Peter Zenger, Colonial printer and editor of the New York Weekly Journal, arrested for "false, scandalous, malicious and seditious libels" against the royal governor of New York. Out of this arrest came the trial and acquittal of Zenger which marked an important step in establishing the principle of the freedom of the press in America.

December 17—William Floyd, a signer of the Declaration of Independence, and a member of every Continental congress from 1775 to 1782, was born in Brookhaven, N. Y.

Events of 1784 which have sesqui-centennial significance:

June 2—Legislature of North Carolina ceded to the congress of the United States the title which that state possessed to lands west of the Alleghanies, leading to the holding of a convention (August 23) at Jonesborough where the westerners decided to organize a separate government and a second convention at Jonesborough (December 17) at which a temporary constitution was adopted and the new state of "Franklin" was launched upon its stormy career.

September 24—Zachary Taylor, officer in the War of 1812, the Black Hawk war and the Seminole war, the "Old Rough and Ready" of the Mexican war and twelfth President of the United States, was born in Orange county, Virginia. A commission has been appointed by the present governor of Virginia to arrange for a sesqui-centennial celebration of this event in 1934.

October 29—Robert Hoe, first of a line of printing press inventors, who revolutionized the newspaper business, was born at Hoes in Leicestershire, England.

December 30—Stephen H. Long, American army engineer and explorer, discoverer of Long's peak in Colorado, was born in Hopkinton, N. H.

Events of 1809 which recall that "125 years ago" on January 19—Edgar Allan Poe, great American poet and story-writer, was born in Boston.

February 12—Abraham Lincoln was born in Kentucky.

February 15—Cyrus McCormick, inventor of the reaper, was born in Walnut Grove, Va.

September 11—Sterling Price, officer in the Mexican war, governor of Missouri and general in the Confederate army, was born in Prince Edward county, Virginia.

December 24—Kit Carson, famous trapper, guide and scout, was born in Madison county, Kentucky.

During the coming year will occur the centennial of these events:

March 20—Charles W. Elliott, educator, president of Harvard university and famous for his "Five-Foot Shelf of Books," was born in Boston.

March 24—John Wesley Powell, geologist, soldier, explorer of the Grand canyon, director of the United States Geological survey, founder and first director of the Bureau of American Ethnology, was born at Mount Morris, N. Y.

April 26—Charles F. Browne, famous writer under the name of "Artemus Ward," was born in Waterford, Maine.

May 5—A party of emigrants under the leadership of Nathaniel J. Wyeth left Liberty, Mo., for the West, later built Fort Hall, Idaho, where the American flag was first flown over that part of the country, and established a colony near the present site of Portland, Ore.

May 20—Lafayette, the great Frenchman who helped establish American independence, died in Paris.

During the coming year will occur the seventy-fifth anniversary of these events which occurred in 1859:

August 26—Col. E. L. Drake sank the first oil well in the United States near Titusville, Pa., starting this giant industry in this country.

September 6—Irving Bacheller, famous author, was born in Pierrepont, N. Y. In 1884 (50 years ago) he established one of the first newspaper syndicates in the country.

October 16—John Brown took possession of the arsenal at Harper's Ferry, was later captured, tried for treason and executed on December 2, giving to the embattled anti-slavery forces an immortal song "John Brown's Body Lies A-Moldering In The Grave."

The year 1934 will mark the fiftieth anniversary of these events of 1884:

June 22—Rescue of seven survivors of 25 members of the Lady Franklin Bay polar expedition, including its commander, A. W. Greely (now an admiral), Sergt. D. L. Brainard (now a general) the rescue party being led by Capt. Winfield S. Schley, later famous in the Spanish-American war.

November 4—Grover Cleveland was elected President of the United States, the first Democratic President in 28 years.

The Constitutional Convention
(Part One.)

Gold, discovered at Sutter's Mill, Coloma, January 24, 1848, brought westward, with its magnetic lure, shoaling hosts in tens of thousands by ox team and by sail. That marvelous saga has been elsewhere and abundantly sung. By mid-1849 Californians, native born and immigrant, had determined on founding here a stable government and enrolling California in the sisterhood of states.

General Bennett Riley, military governor, called a convention to frame a constitution, the meeting to be held at Colton's Hall, Monterey, September 1st, 1849. The convention adjourned October 13, 1849. The constitution, duly approved by the people of California, was submitted to Congress. Statehood was granted September 9, 1850.

No problem of the many coming for solution before the convention was given mre extended debate than the question of an educational system.

Some two hundred years before a Royalist Governor of Virginia, otherwise unremembered of fame, had said: "Thank God, there are no free schools or printing presses here, and I hope that there will be none for a hundred years, for learning has brought heresy and sects into the world, and printing has divulged these and other libels."

The prototypes of the aristocratic Virginia Governor were present in 1849, and they still are present; the ever ready enemies—open or covert—of a free and democratic public school system.

Throughout much of the Union at that time the prevailing social philosophy had not accepted education as a public obligation to the children. The statement was often made that it was wrong "to take money out of one man's pocket to educate another man's child." Child labor—even that of children eight to ten years of age—was common. Parents farmed their children out at early ages in mine and factory, and society looked on with little or no remonstrance at this exploitation of the nation's childhood.

It is true that a few leaders during the revolutionary days had declared the necessity for popular education if a republican form of gvernment was to be made lastingly possible.

Washington himself, in his "Farewell Address to the American People," had said:

"Promote, then, as an object of primary importance, institutions for the general diffusion of knowledge. In proportion as the structure of a government gives force to public opinion, it is essential that public opinion should be enlightened."

But the great majority of the American people had not as yet awakened to the essential dependence of democratic government upon public education.

Thus in the minds of many early Americans in California, education was a matter for parents alone to look after. This attitude is clearly reflected in the Constitutional Convention.

One of the weightiest problems to be settled in this Convention concerned what was to be done with some 500,000 acres of land which the federal government gave to the new state for purposes of internal improvement. Many of the delegates wanted to use the proceeds of this land for roads, harbors, and other forms of development which were urgently needed at the time.

Robert Semple, president of the convention and former editor of California's first newspaper, the "California," took the stand that the entire proceeds from this land should be reserved inviolably for the support of education.

Get White Slip Ready For New License Time

Possession of the white slip certificate of registration in good condition is of leading imprtance to California motorists with approach of the period for renewing registration and securing new license plates for 1934. A statement by the California State Automobile Association advises all motorists to make sure without delay that they have their white slips for the expiring year, and also that the slips are legible and bear the registered owner's correct address. The renewal period opens January 2 and will continue to January 31 at midnight.

Presentation of the white slip is necessary in applying for renewal. In case the slip has been lost or so badly damaged by mutilation or other causes that the data upon it is illegible or doubtful, plates can be obtained by presenting the pink slip certificate of ownership and applying for a duplicate white slip. The pink slip is required in order that the information upon it may be copied in connection with issuance of a duplicate certificate of registration. The state fee for a duplicate white slip is 50 cents, making the total cost of renewal in such cases $3.50.

The regular fee for renewal of registration for private passenger automobiles is $3. After expiration of the regular renewal period on January 31 at midnight, the tardy motorist will be required to pay double, or $6, as a penalty fixed by law.

When the legal owner of a car is being released, both the pink and the white slips must be presented and a state fee of $1, in addition to the $3, is required.

Both slips must also be presented when there are any changes or corrections, other than a change of address.

The Division of Registration, Department of Motor Vehicles, will issue plates at its various offices and receive mail applications at its Sacramento headquarters.

JEFFERSON UNION HIGH SCHOOL NEWS

(By the Journalism Class)

Yesterday at the high school a one-act play was presented for the benefit of the Parent-Teachers' Association student aid fund.

"It's a Gift" was a clever little comedy concerning the experience of a man endowed with a fine Christmas spirit. The man, wishing to help the impecunious heroine, is surprised by a cop as he slips money into the girl's purse as she sleeps. He is accused of being a pickpocket thief. The outcome is surprising and amusing. The playlet was enacted very ably by Walter Fiat, Leila Silacci, Harry Wendell, and Rita Sadler.

Following the play, a group of Christmas carols was presented by the chorus, under the direction of Mrs. Songer. The entire student body joined in the singing as well.

Members of the C. S. F. were entertained yesterday afternoon by a program put on by the Junior Scholars as the socety's last activity of the fall semester.

Rita Sadler gave a recitation; Leila Silacci, a life member of the C. S. F., contributed a poem; Walter Fati gave a talk; and Emma Boskey spoke on the subject of "Japanese Drama."

Both the C. S. F. and the Junior Scholars have been very active this semester in giving programs, and though several of the present members are leaving school and new members entering, the next semester is expected to be just as profitable to all who belong.

Last Friday a roller skate was held at New Iceland with about fifty students in attendance. The event proved to be quite entertaining and a splendid time was had by all. In fact, it was so good that another skate is planned for tonight.

The annual football game between the Jefferson auto shop and the school squad was won last Friday by the shop, 6-0. It was a touch-tackle game, which probably was the reason that the school squad lost. The lone touchdown was made when Stoddard Bright of the shop caught a long pass and ran over the goal standing up.

Engineer James Sounds Warning of Shortage

At the meeting of the San Mateo county board of supervisors, last Monday, Engineer James S. James declared work in his road department faced cessation by the middle of February through depletion of funds, and that the C. W. A. would be the "only salvation" as far as continuation of road work was concerned. He said the board had already drawn claims for $25,000 against his fund that was not budgeted last June.

Thirty-three state, county and city C. W. A. projects in San Mateo county, providing work relief payroll of $162,000 for unemployed men, and four C. W. A. projects for women, with a payroll of about $8,000, were approved by the board.

Trinity Bible Class Entertained

The members of the Bible class of Trinity Center church were entertained at a luncheon and party on Thursday of last week at noon time. The home was decorated with an attractive Christmas scene containing a post office, with a church, Santa and his reindeer, an active volcano, and an unusual Christmas tree. Following the luncheon a fine program was enjoyed by all. The guests included Mrs. Homer Pitman, Mrs. Mabel Sharp, Mrs. Helen Geltz, Mrs. Robinson, Mrs. Streeter, Mrs. Elizabeth Wilson and Mrs. Mabel Kent.

Mrs. John Garibaldi, president of the Colma Parent-Teachers' Association, wishes to extend thanks to the committee in charge of the card party 'ast Friday evening for their excellent resposibility in making the whist a success.

DID YOU EVER STOP TO THINK?

By Edson R. Waite, Shawnee, Okla.

A little time spent in investigation will reveal the rather startling fact that the Japanese competition at which all the world is railing, or at least the business part of it, is actually welcomed by many consumers.

The goods are cheap, and in most instances of poor quality, but not so poor that they do not represent some value for the money. Unfortunately, many consumers seem to think they can no longer afford to buy quality goods and must buy cheap goods made by cheap labor, thereby cutting down the cost of living.

Well, that does not cut down the cost of living. It's the same old story. When you buy goods made in a foreign country, you certainly help that country. When you buy goods made in your own country, you help not only our country but yourself as well.

The way to combat foriegn competition is to have quality merchandise and advertise it continuously in the newspapers. Advertising creates demand. It creates a desire to possess, and if enough advertising is done—not once in a while but all the while—consumers won't buy anything else, and the problem of foreign competition is solved.

The tired looking man sat facing the solicitor.

"So you want a divorce from your wife," said the latter. "Aren't your relations pleasant?"

"Mine are," came the answer, "but hers are simply terrible."

Famous Radio Singer Shot by Rejected Suitor

Emilia Da Prato, of South San Francisco, internationally known as a singer, was shot to death shortly after 10 o'clock last Tuesday morning at her home by Umberto Guisti, 35, San Francisco, described by relatives and police as a disappointed sweetheart.

The shooting was said to have occurred after the young singer, 26, winner of an Atwater-Kent national radio audition in 1927, and with hopes of a New York opera career, had announced to Guisti that she had decided to defer matrimony and give herself entirely to her career. Guisti, who said he was formerly an impressario at Hollywood, declared he was attempting to further the girl's career. Guisti is in jail in Redwood City.

CHRISTMAS!

In every land where the Gospel is taught hearts are thrilling to the Christmas spirit and the joy that filled the hearts of those who heard the angels' song of "Peace on earth and to men goodwill."

To the children this is the most important time of the whole year and the adults will recapture their childhood thrill if they will lay aside their cares and the rush and worry, and remember that this is the time when Christ was born, that He brings peace and goodwill.

The Grace Church of the Nazarene, on Vista and Santa Barbara avenues, will have their annual Sunday School Christmas program Friday evening, December 22, starting at 7:45. Come, parents, friends, relatives and those who are lonely because they have no children to help them enjoy this time of the year. Come Friday evening, hear the songs, the recitations, the musical numbers. You will forget how tired you are and go away with the peace and goodwill of the Christchild abiding in your hearts.

CHRISTMAS ENTERTAINMENT DRAWS CAPACITY AUDIENCE

The Presbyterian church gave a Christmas entertainment for the children on Tuesday night and judging by the attendance it was a great success. All the seats being filled, the children crowded on the platform, while others were content to sit on the floor. A gorgeously illuminated Christmas tree illustrated the plays and recitations which the teachers of the Sunday School had prepared. At the close of the entertainment Santa Claus paid the church a visit and left presents for every boy and girl.

Celebrates Fourteenth Birthday

Mrs. Myrtle Dunstan, of Miriam street, gave a birthday party last Saturday night in honor of her daughter, Miss Juanita Dunstan. The honored guest received many lovely gifts. Among the guests were Jimmy Smith, Woody Olson, Buster Dunstan, Ray Beecher, Dotty Beecher, and Aileen Beecher, Delcy Dunstan, Evelyn Robbins, and Mr. and Mrs. Fred Tiedermann.

CARD OF THANKS

The family of the late Ragnar Nordgren wish to extend their heartfelt thanks to their many friends, the officers and members of Old Glory Post and Auxiliary No. 2044, the members of the Daly City police department, and the Tanforan Florist, for the many acts of kindness and comforting words of sympathy offered during their late bereavement. We also wish to thank W. C. Lasswell & Co., and their staff, for all their kindness and attention shown to us. —Sarah Ann Nordgren and Children.

P. G. & E. Donates Lights During Yuletide Season

Approximately 800 street lights in San Francisco which have been discontinued by the city as an economy measure are to be turned on during the Yuletide season, December 16 to 31, as a Christmas contribution to the city from Pacific Gas & Electric Company.

This announcement was made by P. M. Downing, general manager of the company, who stressed the importance of adequate street lighting during the crush of holiday traffic. Among the shopping districts to receive additional lighting are Market street, with its Path of Gold, and the Triangle downtown district, bounded by Sutter, Market and Mason streets. Other districts included are Divisadero, Geary, Hayes, Haight, Clement, Polk, Fillmore, Sutter, Castro and Mission streets.

According to Downing, the company's Yuletide gift is not only in the interest of public safety and an aid to the general brilliance of the occasion, but also in making for more pleasant holidays.

San Mateo Health Officer Resigns

Resignation of W. C. McLean, San Mateo city health officer, and appointment of Dr. James A. Warburton to that office, is announced. McLean, who has been San Mateo health officer and dairy inspector for the past twenty years, resigned because his duties conflict with his position as county veterinarian and meat inspector.
